The Resort at Paws Up in Montana is unveiling its most luxurious camp yet, North Bank Camp, in June 2017. Tents will have three bedrooms and the dining pavilion is expansive.

The Resort at Paws Up in Montana was a progenitor of the now-sweeping "glamping" phenomenon in America. And next month, the 37,000-acre property is upping the ante even further with the debut of its latest lodging option. North Bank Camp, set upon a timbered ridge above the Blackfoot River, will feature six tents - two with three bedrooms to accommodate up to six people and four two-bedroom tents, with space for up to five. The three-bedroom tents, at 1,200 square feet apiece, have two en suite bathrooms. North Bank joins five other Paws Up camps, which have smaller, but no less well-appointed, tents; all have heated floors and are serviced by a dining pavilion with butlers and a camp chef. Fine amenities to return to after a long day of fly-fishing, sporting clays, cattle drives and other wilderness adventures offered on site. Rates from $703 per person per night based on four people in a three-bedroom tent; 800-473-0601 or pawsup.com.
